Читать в переводах и в русской форме The goal of the present study was to further examine associations of parental attachment dimensions with the clinical and cognitive manifestations of attention-deficit/hyperactivity disorder (ADHD) and to examine the concurrent validity of these dimensions in the context of a parental, sibling, and self-report method of assessment. Parents of children with ADHD were recruited. Forty-six children with ADHD were also recruited, along with their unaffected, typically developing siblings. Parents of children with ADHD completed the Attachment Q-sort on the child. Parents completed the Adult Attachment Interview (AAI), a semistructured interview designed to measure adult attachment. Self-reported and clinician-rated data were obtained from parents and children. Parents' ratings of their children's attachment style were significantly correlated with the concurrent ratings of attachment ( $r_s = .45-.67$ ,  $P$

A: It appears Microsoft provides a downloadable version of Windows Vista here.

Design and construction of waveguides for self-calibration of high-resolution air-coupled surface acoustic wave devices for high frequency ultrasound imaging. A design and construction of two-dimensional conical waveguides for high-resolution air-coupled surface acoustic wave (SAW) devices is presented. The conical waveguides were fabricated from 5-inch thick Teflon plates by stereolithography. In order to maintain the quality of the SAW device, the resonance frequency and bandwidth of the SAW device should be set to an appropriate level. Therefore, the properties of the waveguides should be designed and constructed with special care. In this paper, we present a design and construction of SAW devices based on a conical waveguide which has a large piezoelectric constant and exhibits a sharp resonance in the narrow bandwidth region. The initial focus is to provide a guideline to design and construct SAW devices using a conical waveguide.

Ebola outbreak: 'Angry' Liberian community 'wants answers' Published duration 20 March 2014 image copyright AP image caption Liberian President Ellen Johnson Sirleaf said Liberia was under no threat The people of Liberia are becoming increasingly angry and frustrated at the government's response to the Ebola outbreak, a US aid official has said. "We were really amazed at the anger and frustration in the Liberian community" over the lack of information, said Pamela Bisbee, head of the US government's Ebola response. Officials have been unable to tell the Liberian population how many people are infected. But the World Health Organization says its figures are accurate. More than 1,300 people have died since the first fatality, a Liberian man who died in September, and the virus has spread to neighbouring Sierra Leone and Guinea. 'Sporadic hand washing' "The government has responded well, but the population is beginning to be concerned about lack of information," said Ms Bis 2d92ce491b
