Peggy Stewart was walking to class at Breck High School in Breckenridge, Colorado, when she was jumped from behind by Adam Patterson, 18, on June 5, 2019. Stewart then hit Patterson in the face and heard him yell "I'm going to kill you," when she left him to go to class. Stewart told her classmates she could not leave Patterson on the ground and a school police officer said she should leave with him. Stewart said she called Patterson's mother for help. Patterson said he was trying to play a game of tag and Stewart got between him and a group of boys who he said attacked him. Patterson pleaded guilty to one count of first-degree assault by the end of the day. Stewart's mother, Dena Stewart, told a judge that her daughter was bullied by Patterson before the attack. She said she would "rather my daughter die than get beaten up like that." "He's 18 years old, not a little kid. The kid was a bully. She's very small," Stewart said of her daughter. "My daughter wouldn't put up with that." Dena Stewart said the school never bothered to talk to her about her concerns. Stewart said she told the school nurse that Patterson threatened to stab her daughter, and that she did not report the assault. Kendra Hansen, Stewart's attorney, said she consulted with a psychologist, who said her client should not go to jail. She said that if her client does not receive help in the community, she could get into trouble again. "It's nothing we don't see every day," Hansen said. "This is a child who was bullied, and the school didn't do anything to protect her." The school did not respond to WCCO's request for comment. The station said school officials told the mother of the victim the incident was handled appropriately by school officials. Stewart was arrested at home 2d92ce491b
