So I need to get the project to use the Release build of the.jar file, but currently it's always using the version that's selected in the project (usually `-jar -jar`). How can I change the target command to use the Release version of the.jar file? A: This issue is happening because you are running a Xcode build within a Xcode build. So what is happening is that Xcode is trying to archive when you actually want it to build. I found that the easiest way to resolve this issue is to just build the project outside of Xcode. If your project is made of multiple schemes that Xcode is conflicted about, then you can resolve this by changing your build command to: `xcodebuild -target -configuration release build` May 31, 2009 Weird And Wonderful We had a bit of a soggy morning around the studio, unfortunately the weather was not the rain itself but the clouds that it created...they were just way too low and it was way too hot. By lunchtime we had lost most of the rain and though we were a bit better warmed up we still had our coats on. It was a pretty good way to start the day.I
