The clinical data on 121 cases of dermatophytosis in a hospital dermatology outpatient clinic for elderly persons in Vienna were analyzed with the aim of assessing the clinical features, causative agents and possible risk factors for such infections. The median age of the patients was 75 years. The most frequent skin disorders were psoriasis (73 patients), seborrhoea (50 patients) and onychomycosis (49 patients). Forty per cent of the patients had more than one skin disorder, one patient had two simultaneous dermatophytosis. The basophil degranulation test using Methyl-5-Hydroxy-Tryptamine (MT5-HT) as a stimulus was evaluated by means of a semi-quantitative scoring system to establish its utility for the diagnosis of drug-induced asthma. Twenty-one patients with drug-induced asthma, and 30 with stable asthma, as well as 10 normal subjects, were studied. We observed significant correlations between the degree of basophil histamine release and the clinical parameters used in the diagnosis of drug-induced asthma (including FEV1). We evaluated the diagnostic utility of the test in comparison with the measurement of the basophil cationic protein (BasCp), the basophil cationic granulocyte chemotactic factor (B-G-CSF), and the basophil cationic leukocyte migration inhibition test (BCMLIT). The evaluation of the diagnostic utility of the MT5-HT test showed that the presence of bronchospasm was a better discriminator than the degree of histamine release. The degree of histamine release can be estimated by a semiquantitative scoring system, which allows the classification of drug-induced asthmatic patients into three groups with different clinical sensitivity: sensitive, moderately sensitive and resistant. However, there is no difference in specificity between these three groups. On the other hand, the tests for the evaluation of the activity of bronchial mast cells (BasCp) and basophil chemotaxis (BCMLIT) showed lower sensitivity than the MT5-HT test. These data suggest that the MT5-HT test may be a useful tool in the diagnosis of drug-induced asthma, however, it should not be used alone.(ABSTRACT TRUNCATED AT 250 WORDS)Biodegradation of Sudan Dyes by Spodoptera littoralis (Boisduval)
