In 1.2.9 of the CoC one can read: A question should be reasonably scoped. If you can imagine an entire book that answers your question, you're asking too much. What are the basic prerequisites for this statement (and as an argument against it)? A: In general, questions should: Be on topic, Have a good title that is broadly descriptive, Be on-topic and not bad, Be answerable, and Be interesting. A question should be reasonably scoped. If you can imagine an entire book that answers your question, you're asking too much. I don't see any problem with this. Books are usually reasonably scoped. One could imagine many answers to this question. A book will have an introduction, explanation of the rules, an overview of all the rules in detail, and an example. If the question is off topic, down voted, has no title that is good, and has no good answers, then it will not attract enough attention to be worth answering. Association of matrix metalloproteinase-1 and proteinase 3 polymorphisms with end-stage renal disease in patients with IgA nephropathy. Matrix metalloproteinases (MMPs) and their inhibitors (TIMPs) have been implicated in the progression of glomerular diseases. We investigated the associations between 3 MMP SNPs (rs639752, rs3025058 and rs2287074) and 1 TIMP SNP (rs1799750) and end-stage renal disease (ESRD) in patients with IgA nephropathy (IgAN). A total of 208 IgAN patients were included. The gene polymorphisms were analyzed using polymerase chain reaction (PCR) and Taqman assays. Allele and genotype frequencies of the polymorphisms did not differ significantly between the patients with and without ESRD. However, the risk for ESRD increased in the patient group that had rs3025058 G>A compared with the patient group that had GG (hazard ratio, 1.758; 95% confidence interval, 0.959-3.204; P = 648931e174
