description From the descriptions: karachi se lahore movie In the urban elite of the modern-day Pakistan, Seema, a beautiful young geologist, is torn between the love of two men: Sohail, an urbane business associate who taunts her with the same old 'poem' every night, and Laila, who is pursuing her. Posing as an elderly sage, Seema recruits two young men, Vikram and Chirag, to kidnap Laila.
Things quickly get out of hand and the teenagers embark on a dangerous journey through Pakistan's mountains and lakes, to a remote village where they have only the haziest of ideas about what's to come. This brilliant debut captures the confusion of modern life, with its glittering lights and squalid shadows. movie download In the urban elite of the modern-day Pakistan, Seema, a beautiful young

A: It seems like you need to parse the response that you're getting from AJAX and break it down to two levels. Parse your server response first: `$.get('dynamic_page.php', function(data) { var obj = jQuery.parseJSON(data); console.log(obj); });` Then, assuming you have your JSON in obj, you need to parse it and output the correct JSON: `$.each(obj, function (key, value) { //use your loop variable here and create the value you need //for example: alert(key + '-' + value); });` For more on JSON.parse and jQuery.each(), check out Edit: Your question isn't clear and you left out a lot of information, so here's what I think you want to do: `$.each(obj, function (i) { //do something with i here });`; Q: Why does my queue variable still get set to a null value? I want to use a queue to manage a number of tasks that I want to perform in a specific order. Each task is called independently and has its own arguments and async callback, like so: `queue = new q.queue({ maxConnections: 500 }, function (error, q) { q.get(1,function(){ // do something 648931e174`

I have a string NSString *txt = @"NAME:ABC\r\r"; and i want to read only ABC and the number of rows and cols between ABC\r\r how can i achieve this? A: `txt = [txt stringByTrimmingCharactersInSet:[NSSet characterSetNewlineCharacterSet]]; NSScanner *scanner = [NSScanner scannerWithString:txt]; int value = [[scanner scanInt:NULL] intValue]; NSString *stringValue = [NSString stringWithFormat:@"%d by %d", value, value];` Scanner will scan an integer from the first newline into the variable, if there are several characters at the end of the line the strings will be padded. `[[NSScanner alloc] initWithString:]` will scan the string from the beginning to the first newline then split it into multiple lines. The code above assumes that the line is just one integer, if it is a more complex structure than just an integer, you could change the NSScanner to match the delimiter instead. It has now come to my attention that PROOF BEYOND A REASONABLE DOUBT OF CRIMINAL INTENT IS NOT A BASIS FOR CRIMINAL INJUNCTION. That is why there is no criminal defense to injunctions - until the Supreme Court gets around to deciding that, and then that decision becomes precedent. I don't mind regulation, but can we please stop worrying so much about the regulatory process and actually get something done. So tired of all of the getting back and forth over regulations and instructions. That's why when I read a news article, I don't read into a regulation, it's to see if something is going to actually happen in the real world. It has now come to my attention that PROOF BEYOND A REASONABLE DOUBT OF CRIMINAL INTENT IS NOT A BASIS FOR CRIMINAL INJUNCTION. That is why there is no criminal defense to injunctions - until the Supreme Court gets around to deciding that, and then
